Partie IV

Test your written comprehension

There was a South African couple at the hotel, Tony and Norah Swart. He was a fat and father silent red-faced man in his midforties, and she was harder and younger, talkative and unsmiling, a girl with a grudge. Tony's silence was a kind of apology, for Norah was usually complaining, and she had that hypersensitivity that some South Africans have, the bristling suspicion that any moment she is going to be accused of being a bumpkin, and the justified fear that she is a bumpkin. She was proud of, and at the same time hated, her snarling accent and bad manners.

It had been a horrible trip from Capetown. They had wanted to stop in Nigeria and Zaire, but those African countries would not let them enter. Norah Swart said, «It's bleddy unfair».

I said this was probably because Africans were discriminated against in South Africa. They treated Africans like dogs, so African countries were disinclined to put out the red carpet for South Africans. «The real trouble», Mrs Swart said, «is that we were too nice to them. When the Australians were shooting their Abos and you were killing your Indians, we were looking after our Blacks».

«Of course», I said. «You're famous for looking after your Blacks».

«Kristy, my Australian friend, said to me, 'If you'd shot yours like we did ours you wouldn't have these problems today'».

I said, «What a pity you didn't exterminate them».

«That's what I say», Mrs Swart said, The thought of mass murder softened her features and for the first time she looked almost pretty.

But her husband saw I was being sarcastic. He kept his gaze on me and went very quiet.
